1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to words in bold

Competitive advantage

The term innovation has a commercial aspect different from scientific research. Innovation has a very important role in economic development of countries, because innovative companies, through commercializing their research and development results, are creating new and nonexistent value. Furthermore these same companies are getting an important share of the newly created value. By this way, they are mainly creating wealth for themselves, for their country and for the world. Innovation includes both product and service and process innovations. Product innovations are products that are perceived to be new by either the producer or the customer; the latter includes both end- users and distributors. Process of innovation refers to new processes which either reduce the cost of production or enable the production of new products. In spite of the increasing importance of innovation and the role played by technological capabilities in a firm's growth trajectory, little is known how technological innovation in different organizations is driven by their technology strategy, the plan that guides the accumulation and deployment of technological resources and capabilities.

That is, the most innovative firms engage in a continual search for better products, services, and ways of doing things. They try to continuously upgrade their internal capabilities and other resources. Aggregate innovative capacity of a nation is derived from the collective innovative capacity of its firms. The more innovative firms a nation has, the stronger that nation's competitive advantage. Innovation also promotes productivity, the value of the output produced by a unit of labor or capital. The more productive a company is, the more efficiently it uses its resources. The more productive the firms in a nation are, the more efficiently the nation uses its resources. Innovation and entrepreneurial activity are the engines of long-run economic growth.

Often, entrepreneurs first commercialize innovative new products and processes, and entrepreneurial activity provides much of dynamism in an economy. For example, the economy of the United States has benefited greatly from a high level of entrepreneurial activity, which has resulted in rapid innovation in products and processes.

Human resources for competitive advantage

Human resources are a term used to describe the individuals who comprise the workforce of an organization, although it is also applied in labor economics to, for example, business sectors or even whole nations. Firms can develop this competitive advantage only by creating value in a way that is difficult for competitors to imitate. Traditional sources of competitive advantage such as financial and natural resources, technology and economies of scale can be used to create value. However, the resource-based argument is that these sources are increasingly accessible and easy to imitate. Thus they are less significant for competitive advantage especially in comparison to a complex social structure such as an employment system. If that is so, human resource policies and practices may be an especially important source of sustained competitive advantage.

Within the best practices approach to strategic HRM, the first practice, internal career opportunities, refers to the organizational preference for hiring primarily from within. Second, training systems refers to whether organizations provide extensive training opportunities for their employees or whether they depend on selection and socialization processes to obtain required skills. Third, appraisals are conceptualized in terms of outcome-based performance ratings and the extent to which subordinate views are taken into account in these ratings. Fourth, employment security reflects the degree to which employees feel secure about continued employment in their jobs. Although formalized employment security is generally on the decline, organizations may have either an implicit or an explicit policy. Fifth, employee participation, both in terms of taking part in decision making and having opportunities to communicate suggestions for improvement, has emerged as a strategic HRM practice. Sixth, job description refers to the extent jobs are tightly and clearly defined so that employees know what is expected of them. Finally, profit sharing reflects the concern for overall organizational performance on a sustainable basis argue that the future HR professional will need four basic competencies to become partners in the strategic management process. These include business competence, professional and technical knowledge, integration competence and ability to manage change. Human Resources seeks to achieve this by aligning the supply of skilled and qualified individuals and the capabilities of the current workforce, with the organization's ongoing and future survival and success. In ensuring such objectives are achieved, the human resource function purpose in this context is to implement the organization's human resource requirements effectively but also pragmatically, taking account of legal, ethical and as far as is practical in a manner that retains the support and respect of the workforce.

Organizational structure for competitive advantage

Organizations are a variant of clustered entities. An organization can be structured in many different ways, depending on their objectives. The structure of an organization will determine the modes in which it operates and performs. Organizational structure allows the expressed allocation of responsibilities for different functions and processes to different entities such as the branch, department, workgroup and individual. Individuals in an organizational structure are normally hired under time-limited work contracts or work orders, or under permanent employment contracts or program orders. Also, this correlate of changing structures and processes is reinforced by increased competitive pressure forcing companies to focus on their core competencies, redrawing their boundaries around what constitute and support their competitive advantage. This pressure is reflected in the changing organizational structures from a functional to a multi-divisional one, through the shifting of business towards smaller, decentralized units. When superior skills or resources exist outside the company, firms are making increased use of strategic alliances to supplement and sometimes enhance their own competencies. Whenever by alliances, outsourcing or downscoping, firms appear to be drawing in their boundaries around narrower spheres of activities

An effective organizational structure shall facilitate working relationships between various entities in the organization and may improve the working efficiency within the organizational units. Organization shall retain a set order and control to enable monitoring the processes. Organization shall support command for coping with a mix of orders and a change of conditions while performing work. Organization shall allow for application of individual skills to enable high flexibility and apply creativity. When a business expands, the chain of command will lengthen and the spans of control will widen. When an organization comes to age, the flexibility will decrease and the creativity will fatigue. Therefore organizational structures shall be altered from time to time to enable recovery. If such alteration is prevented internally, the final escape is to turn down the organization to prepare for a re-launch in an entirely new set up.

Strategies for Competitive Advantage

The differentiation and cost leadership strategies seek competitive advantage in a broad range of market or industry segments. By contrast, the differentiation focus and cost focus strategies are adopted in a narrow market or industry. A firm positions itself by leveraging its strengths. Porter has argued that a firm's strengths ultimately fall into one of two headings: cost advantage and differentiation. By applying these strengths in either a broad or narrow scope, three generic strategies result: cost leadership, differentiation, and focus. These strategies are applied at the business unit level. They are called generic strategies because they are not firm or industry dependent. The following Porter's generic strategies:

1. Strategy - Differentiation

This strategy involves selecting one or more criteria used by buyers in a market - and then positioning the business uniquely to meet those criteria. This strategy is usually associated with charging a premium price for the product - often to reflect the higher production costs and extra value- added features provided for the consumer. Differentiation is about charging a premium price that more than covers the additional production costs, and about giving customers clear reasons to prefer the product over other, less differentiated products. Firms that succeed in a differentiation strategy often have the following internal strengths:

- 1) Access to leading scientific research.
- 2) Highly skilled and creative product development team.

3) Strong sales team with the ability to successfully communicate the perceived strengths of the product.

2. Strategy - Cost Leadership

With this strategy, the objective is to become the lowest-cost producer in the industry. Many (perhaps all) market segments in the industry are supplied with the emphasis placed minimizing costs. If the achieved selling price can at least equal (or near) the average for the market, then the lowest-cost producer will (in theory) enjoy the best profits. This strategy is usually associated with large-scale businesses offering standard products with relatively little differentiation that are perfectly acceptable to the majority of customers. Occasionally, a low-cost leader will also discount its product to maximise sales, particularly if it has a significant cost advantage over the competition and, in doing so, it can further increase its market share. Firms that succeed in cost leadership often have the following internal strengths:

• Access to the capital required making a significant investment in production assets; this investment represents a barrier to entry that many firms may not overcome.

• Skill in designing products for efficient manufacturing, for example, having a small component count to shorten the assembly process.

- High level of expertise in manufacturing process engineering.
- Efficient distribution channels.

2. Strategy - Differentiation Focus

In the differentiation focus strategy, a business aims to differentiate within just one or a small number of target market segments. The special customer needs of the segment mean that there are opportunities to provide products that are clearly different from competitors who may be targeting a broader group of customers. Companies following focused differentiation strategies produce customised products for small market segments.

They can be successful when either the quantities involved are too small for industry-wide competitors to handle economically, or when the extent of customisation (or differentiation) requested is beyond the capabilities of the industry-wide differentiator. The important issue for any business adopting this strategy is to ensure that customers really do have different needs and wants - in other words that there is a valid basis for differentiation - and that existing competitor products are not meeting those needs and wants.

3. Strategy - Cost Focus

Companies that compete by following cost leadership strategies to serve narrow market niches generally target the smallest buyers in an industry (those who purchase in such small quantities those industry-wide competitors cannot serve them at the same low cost). Here a business seeks a lower-cost advantage in just on or a small number of market segments. The product will be basic - perhaps a similar product to the higher-priced and featured market leader, but acceptable to sufficient consumers.

LEADERSHIP

1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to words in bold Leadership

Leadership has been described as "a process of social influence in which one person can enlist the aid and support of others in the accomplishment of a common task", although there are alternative definitions of leadership. For example, some understand a leader simply as somebody whom people follow, or as somebody who guides or directs others, while others define leadership as "organizing a group of people to achieve a common goal".

Studies of leadership have produced theories involving traits, situational interaction, function, behavior, power, vision and values, charisma, and intelligence, among others.

The search for the characteristics or traits of leaders has been ongoing for centuries. Philosophical writings from Plato's Republic to Plutarch's Lives have explored the question "What qualities distinguish an individual as a leader?" Underlying this search was the early recognition of the importance of leadership and the assumption that leadership is rooted in the characteristics that certain individuals possess. This idea that leadership is based on individual attributes is known as the "trait theory of leadership".

The trait theory was explored at length in a number of works in the 19th century. Most notable are the writings of Thomas Carlyle and Francis Galton, whose works have prompted decades of research. In Heroes and Hero Worship (1841), Carlyle identified the talents, skills, and physical characteristics of men who rose to power. In Galton's Hereditary Genius (1869), he examined leadership qualities in the families of powerful men. After showing that the numbers of eminent relatives dropped off when moving from first degree to second degree relatives, Galton concluded that leadership was inherited. In other words, leaders were born, not developed. Both of these notable works lent great initial support for the notion that leadership is rooted in characteristics of the leader.

During the 1980s statistical advances allowed researchers to conduct metaanalyses, in which they could quantitatively analyze and summarize the findings from a wide array of studies. This advent allowed trait theorists to create a comprehensive picture of previous leadership research rather than rely on the qualitative reviews of the past. Equipped with new methods, leadership researchers revealed the following:

Individuals can and do emerge as leaders across a variety of situations and tasks.

Significant relationships exist between leadership and such individual traits as:

- intelligence
- adjustment
- extraversion
- conscientiousness
- openness to experience
- general self-efficacy

While the trait theory of leadership has certainly regained popularity, its reemergence has not been accompanied by a corresponding increase in sophisticated conceptual frameworks.

Specifically, Zaccaro noted that trait theories still:

- focus on a small set of individual attributes such as Big Five personality traits, to the neglect of cognitive abilities, motives, values, social skills, expertise, and problem-solving skills;
- 2) fail to consider patterns or integrations of multiple attributes;
- do not distinguish between those leader attributes that are generally not malleable over time and those that are shaped by, and bound to, situational influences; do not consider how stable leader attributes account for the behavioral diversity necessary for effective leadership.

Kurt Lewin, Ronald Lipitt, and Ralph White developed in 1939 the seminal work on the influence of leadership styles and performance. The researchers evaluated the performance of groups of eleven-year-old boys under different types of work climate. In each, the leader exercised his influence regarding the type of group decision making, praise and criticism (feedback), and the management of the group tasks (project management) according to three styles: authoritarian, democratic, and laissez-faire.

Autocratic or authoritarian style

Under the autocratic leadership style, all decision-making powers are centralized in the leader, as with dictators.

Leaders do not entertain any suggestions or initiatives from subordinates. The autocratic management has been successful as it provides strong motivation to the manager. It permits quick decision-making, as only one person decides for the whole group and keeps each decision to him/herself until he/she feels it needs to be shared with the rest of the group.

Participative or democratic style

The democratic leadership style consists of the leader sharing the decisionmaking abilities with group members by promoting the interests of the group members and by practicing social equality. This has also been called shared leadership.

Laissez-faire or free-rein style

A person may be in a leadership position without providing leadership, leaving the group to fend for itself. Subordinates are given a free hand in deciding their own policies and methods. The subordinates are motivated to be creative and innovative.

Leadership can be perceived as a particularly emotion-laden process, with emotions entwined with the social influence process. In an organization, the leader's mood has some effects on his/her group. These effects can be described in three levels:

- 1) The mood of individual group members. Group members with leaders in a positive mood experience more positive mood than do group members with leaders in a negative mood. The leaders transmit their moods to other group members through the mechanism of emotional contagion. Mood contagion may be one of the psychological mechanisms by which charismatic leaders influence followers.
- 2) The affective tone of the group. Group affective tone represents the consistent or homogeneous affective reactions within a group. Group affective tone is an aggregate of the moods of the individual members of the group and refers to mood at the group level of analysis. Groups with leaders in a positive mood have a more positive affective tone than do groups with leaders in a negative mood.
- 3) Group processes like coordination, effort expenditure, and task strategy. Public expressions of mood impact how group members think and act. When people experience and express mood, they send signals to others. Leaders signal their goals, intentions, and attitudes through their expressions of moods. For example, expressions of positive moods by leaders signal that leaders deem progress toward goals to be good. The group members respond to those signals cognitively and behaviorally in ways that are reflected in the group processes.

Different situations call for different leadership styles. In an emergency when there is little time to converge on an agreement and where a designated authority has significantly more experience or expertise than the rest of the team, an autocratic leadership style may be most effective; however, in a highly motivated and aligned team with a homogeneous level of expertise, a more democratic or laissez-faire style may be more effective. The style adopted should be the one that most effectively achieves the objectives of the group while balancing the interests of its individual members.

HUMAN RESOURCES

1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to the words in bold Human resource management

The specialized task of obtaining the workers a company needs and then overseeing their training, evaluation and compensation is known as personnel management. Human resource management is becoming more complex as the work force, the economy and corporate cultures are changing at an ever increasing pace.

The first step in staffing a business organization is human resource planning. The organization must forecast demand and then determine the numbers and types of workers that will be required to meet this demand. Factors to be considered include determining whether workers with the required skills can be found in the general work force. Job analysis is the process by which jobs are studied to determine the tasks and dynamics involved. Questions that must be asked involve the qualifications and skills required to do the job as well as the actual tasks to be performed. The information needed for job analysis may be obtained by interviewing employees or supervisors, by direct observation, or by asking workers to keep diaries describing their workday.

After completing the job analysis the human resource manager may develop a job description, which is a specific statement of the tasks involved in the job and conditions under which the holder of the job will work. A job specification may also be devised, that is, a statement describing the kind of person who would be best for the job, including skills, education, and previous work experience.

Using the job specification, recruiters (specialists on the human resources staff responsible for obtaining candidates) try to match it to a person. The person may be found within the organization (promote a present employee) or outside.

Although, the actual stages of the hiring process may vary from one firm to another, most companies go through certain basic processes. A small number of qualified candidates may be chosen on the basis of a standard application blank and/or on the basis of their resumes (a summary of education, experience, interests and other personal data compiled by the applicant). Each candidate would then be interviewed and may be asked to take a test or series of tests. An in-depth interview with the most likely candidates may follow, and then the candidates would be interviewed by the individual who, if they were hired, would be their supervisor. Firms have orientation procedures for new workers to ensure that they understand the company's goals, policies and procedures.

Companies are today developing highly structured performance appraisal systems to provide the necessary objective worker evaluations. Such systems include standards, in writing, so that both the supervisor and the worker understand what is expected of them. The biggest problem with such systems, however, is finding a way to measure performance, as it is not always an easy criterion to judge.

In return to their services, workers receive compensation, which can take the form of payments, benefits, and employer services. For many blue-collar and some white-collar workers, compensation takes the form of wages, a payment based on calculation of the number of hours worked or the number of units produced. Other workers are paid a salary, which bases compensation on a unit of time such as a week, a month, or a year, rather than an hour. Salaried workers typically receive no pay for working overtime.

To increase productivity firms often offer workers incentives linked to levels of production or profitability. Both salaried and wage-earning workers may receive a bonus – a payment in addition to the regular wage or salary. Commissions payments made to an employee based on sales made, may also be used as an addition to a worker's salary or as an employee's sole method of compensation.

Financial benefits other than wages, salaries, and incentives that are provided for workers are called fringe benefits. Fringe benefits may include paid holidays, sick pay and paid vacations. Additionally, parents are increasingly looking for such benefits as unpaid leaves to take care of babies.

CULTURE

1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to the words in bold

Different layers of culture

It is possible to describe culture as a shared set of basic assumptions and values, with resultant behavioural norms, attitudes and beliefs which manifest themselves in systems and institutions as well as behavioural patterns and non-behavioural items. There are various levels to culture, ranging from the easily observable outer layers (such as behavioural conventions) to the increasingly more difficult for understanding inner layers (such as assumptions and values). Culture is shared among members of one group or society, and serves for understanding between the members of that group. Culture is situated between the human nature on the one hand and the individual personality on the other. Culture is not inheritable or genetic, but culture is learned. Although all members of a group or society share their culture, their behaviour depends on their individuality as well as on the culture.

Culture consists of various levels.

- A level of values or an invisible level
- A visible level of resultant behaviour or artifacts of some form.

This view of culture is embodied in the popular 'iceberg model' of culture. The multilevel nature of culture is important because of several aspects: It identifies a visible area as well as an area that is not immediately visible, but that can be derived by careful attention to the visible elements of the cultural system as we understand it.

- Culture is a complex concept.
- Everyone has a culture.
- It shapes how we see the world, ourselves, and others.

Make the point that only about one-eighth of an iceberg is visible above the water. The rest is below. Culture is very similar to an iceberg. It has some aspects that are visible and many others that can only be suspected, guessed, or learned as understanding of the culture grows. Like an iceberg, the visible part of culture is only a small part of a much larger whole.

Another model is an "onion" model. In this view, 'culture' is like an onion: a system that can be peeled, layer by layer, in order to reveal the content. At the core of this model of culture are values, or: broad tendencies to prefer certain states of affairs over others. These values form the most hidden layer of culture. Values as such represent the ideas that people have about how things "ought to be". Values are strongly influencing behaviour.

Above the values, this concept describes three levels of culture that are more clearly observable:

- 8. Rituals, such as ways of greeting and paying respect
- 9. Heroes, such as admired persons who serve as an example for behaviour
- 10.Symbols, such as words, colour or other artefacts that carry a special meaning

A different approach to finding cultural value differences has been taken by Shalom Schwartz. Using his "SVI" (Schwartz Value Inventory), Schwartz asked respondents to assess 57 values as to how important they felt these values are as "guiding principles of one's life".From data collected in 63 countries, with more than 60,000 individuals taking part, Schwartz derived a total of 10 distinct value types at an individual-level analysis:

- Power
- Achievement
- Hedonism
- Stimulation
- Self-direction
- Universalism
- Benevolence
- Tradition
- Conformity
- Security

These individual level value types each represent a number of values which can be combined in a joint 'idea': Values located in the 'power' value type represent are likely to indicate an individual that values social status and prestige or control and dominance over people and resources. High scores in the 'achievement' value type would indicate a high priority given to personal success and admiration. 'Hedonism' represents a value type where preference is given to pleasure and self- entertainment. 'Stimulation' represents a group of values that express a preference for an exciting life, and 'self-direction' a distinct group of values that value independence, creativity and freedom. The 'Universalism' value type on the other side represents a preference for social justice and tolerance, whereas the 'benevolence' value domain contains values promoting the welfare of others. The 'Conformity' value type contains values that represent obedience and the 'tradition' value type is made up out of values representing a respect for traditions and customs. Lastly, the 'security' value type is a value orientation containing values relating to the safety, harmony and welfare of society and of one self.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to words in bold Balance of Payment, Balance of Trade & Gross National Product

The following text contains several terms of importance to your understanding of International trade. While reading, underline the terms you find.

The balance of payments (BOP) is the method countries use to monitor all international monetary transactions at a specific period of time. Usually, the BOP is calculated every quarter and every calendar year. All trades conducted by both the private and public sectors are accounted for in the BOP in order to determine how much money is going in and out of a country. If a country has received money, this is known as a credit, and, if a country has paid or given money, the transaction is counted as a debit. Theoretically, the BOP should be zero, meaning that assets or credits and liabilities or debits, should balance. But in practice this is rarely the case and, thus, the BOP can tell the observer if a country has a deficit or a surplus and from which part of the economy the discrepancies are stemming.

The BOP is divided into sub-accounts but the most important are the current account and the financial account. Within these categories are sub-divisions, each of which accounts for a different type of international monetary transaction.

Current Account is record of all international transactions for goods and services, income payments and receipts, and unilateral transfers. The current account is used in the national income identity for GNP.

Merchandise Trade Account is record of all international transactions for goods only. Goods include physical items like autos, steel, food, clothes, appliances, furniture, etc.

Services Account is record of all international transactions for services only. Services include transportation, insurance, hotel, restaurant, legal, consulting, etc.

Goods and Services Account is record of all international transactions for goods and services only. The goods and services account is used in the national income identity for GDP.

Financial Account is record of all international transactions for assets. Assets include bonds, Treasury bills, bank deposits, stocks, currency, real estate, etc.

The Current Account. The current account is used to mark the inflow and outflow of goods and services into a country. Earnings on investments, both public and private, are also put into the current account. Within the current account are credits and debits on the trade of merchandise, which includes goods such as raw materials and manufactured goods that are bought, sold or given away (possibly in the form of aid). Services refer to receipts from tourism, transportation (like the levy that must be paid in Egypt when a ship passes through the Suez Canal), engineering, business service fees (from lawyers or management consulting, for example), and royalties from patents and copyrights. When combined, goods and services together make up a country's balance of trade (BOT). The BOT is typically the biggest bulk of a country's balance of trade deficit, it imports more than it exports, and if it has a balance of trade surplus, it exports more than it imports.

Receipts from income-generating assets such as stocks (in the form of dividends) are also recorded in the current account. The last component of the current account is unilateral transfers. These are credits that are mostly worker's remittances, which are salaries sent back into the home country of a national working abroad, as well as foreign aid that is directly received.

The Capital or Financial Account. The capital account is where all international capital transfers are recorded. This refers to the acquisition or disposal of non-financial assets (for example, a physical asset such as land) and non-produced assets, which are needed for production but have not been produced, like a mine used for the extraction of diamonds.

The capital account is broken down into the monetary flows branching from debt forgiveness, the transfer of goods, and financial assets by migrants leaving or entering a country, the transfer of ownership on fixed assets (assets such as equipment used in the production process to generate income), the transfer of funds received to the sale or acquisition of fixed assets, gift and inheritance taxes, death levies, and, finally, uninsured damage to fixed assets.

The Financial Account. In the financial account, international monetary flows related to investment in business, real estate, bonds and stocks are documented. Also included are government owned assets such as foreign reserves, gold, special drawing rights (SDRs) held with the International Monetary Fund, private assets held abroad, and direct foreign investment. Assets owned by foreigners, private and official, are also recorded in the financial account.

The Balancing Act. The current account should be balanced against the combined-capital and financial accounts. However, as mentioned above, this rarely happens. We should also note that, with fluctuating exchange rates, the change in the value of money can add to BOP discrepancies. When there is a deficit in the current account, which is a balance of trade deficit, the difference can be borrowed or funded by the capital account. If a country has a fixed asset abroad, this borrowed amount is marked as a capital account outflow. However, the sale of that fixed asset would be considered a current account inflow (earnings from investments). The current account deficit would thus be funded.

When a country has a current account deficit that is financed by the capital account, the country is actually foregoing capital assets for more goods and services.

If a country is borrowing money to fund its current account deficit, this would appear as an inflow of foreign capital in the BOP.

Gross Domestic Product vs Gross National Product. There are two ways or measuring the national income of a country: its GDP (Gross Domestic Product) and its GNP (Gross National Product). The gross domestic product represents the value of all goods and services produced within a country while the gross national product represents the value of all goods and services produced by domestic factors of production. For example, a Colombian-owned company produces goods in Venezuela and this production is counted as part of Venezuela's GDP because the productive activity occurred in the country. However, the income generated by the Colombian company will be part of that country's GNP.

ETHICS

1. Read the text carefully. Pay attention to words in bold.

Ethics. General Business ethical issues.

Ethical behaviour is doing things that are morally right. Ethics (countable noun) are moral beliefs about what is right or wrong. Ethics (uncountable noun) is the study of this. Ethically responsible companies want to do the right thing in areas such as:

- employment and community: they want to pay attention to things that affect all people, not just their employees, in the areas where the company has its offices, factories and activities.

- the environment: they want to conduct business in ways that protect the environment to ensure that the air, rivers etc. are not polluted and plant and animal life are not endangered.

- winning new business: they want to get business without engaging in corrupt behaviour, for example offering bribes - money given to someone so that they behave unethically.

Companies want to be seen as good corporate citizens, with activities that are beneficial not only for their stakeholders - their employees, shareholders and so on - but for the community and society as a whole.

Ethical corporate behaviour includes accountability - the idea that companies are completely responsible for what they do and that people should be able to expect them to explain their actions. Transparency is explaining this behaviour in a way that can be understood by outsiders, and not trying to hide anything. Companies may say that they demand high levels of probity and integrity - complete honesty - from their employees, and that they do not tolerate any form of misconduct.

Companies have long had codes of ethics and codes of conduct saying how their managers and employees should behave. Now they are looking at these issues in more systematic ways. They are designating executives to oversee the whole area of corporate social responsibility (CSR).

George Unwin is a fund manager for an ethical investment fund:

'People and organizations who put their money into our fund want us to invest it in ethical ways. We want to avoid companies that have a bad record on social and environmental issues. We particularly want to avoid certain sectors - tobacco, arms manufacturers, and nuclear power or uranium producers. So we put our clients' money into funds that do not invest in these activities. In selecting companies to invest in, we look closely at how they are managed. We are particularly interested in issues of corporate governance. We believe that well-managed companies make better investments.'

There is more and more relevant information about ethically run companies that people can put their money into. In the UK, FTSE4Good is an index of ethically managed companies. In the US, they have the Dow Jones Sustainability INDEXES - DJSI World and DJSI Stoxx, containing companies which are run in a way that takes account of the long-term interests of society and the environment. This concept, known as corporate sustainability, is defined by DJSI in these terms:

1. strategy: integrating long-term economic, environmental and social aspects into their business strategies while maintaining global competitiveness and brand reputation.

2. financial: meeting shareholders' demands for sound financial returns, longterm economic growth, open communication and transparent financial accounting.

3. customer and product: fostering loyalty by investing in customer relationship management, and product and service innovation that focuses on technologies and systems which use financial, natural and social resources in an efficient, effective and economic manner over the long term.

4. governance and stakeholder: setting the highest standards of corporate governance and stakeholder engagement, including corporate codes of conduct and public reporting.

5. human: managing human resources to maintain workforce capabilities and employee satisfaction through best-in-class organizational learning and knowledge management practices, and remuneration and benefit programs.

The FTSE4Good and DJSI indexes give the overall value of the share prices of the ethical firms, and we can compare the performance of individual firms against them. This is part of the movement towards socially responsible investment (SRI).

Businesses are increasingly aware of the importance of social and environmental issues for their reputation. Some are commissioning social audits relating to their social performance; these evaluate the effect of their behaviour in relation to their employees and to society as whole. Supporters of social audits say that this social reporting is as important as financial reporting. They say that it provides important information for all of a company's stakeholders. This is part of the wider picture of stakeholder theory, the idea that companies have responsibilities not only to employees, customers and shareholders, but to all members of society affected by their activities. Critics say that a social audit may just be a public relations exercise, with no real benefits.

There is an area in business that is commonly known as industrial espionage. Although some people have condemned such activities, others think that all is fair in war. The following shows some of the ways one can obtain information from men who know the enemy position.

Which of the following in your opinion are illegal, immoral, unethical, dishonest?

- Getting information from potential recruits. In the past when conducting job interviews, I found some applicants...would unknowingly or even deliberately become invaluable source of information.

- Conducting false job interviews. Here the intention is not really to employ but rather to get the selected candidates to talk and reveal some useful information.

- Hiring people away from competitors. A deliberate "headhunting" activity

- Deliberately planting spies in a competitors firm. There have been cases where a person leaves his organization to join a competitor for a while before retuning to his original organization.

- Encouraging key customers to talk. From my experience, key customers such as my wholesalers and industrial buyers are always more than ready to talk.

- Interviewing competitors. A way of interviewing your interviewing is to pretend to be a potential customer or supplier.

- Taking factory tours. Highly trained and observant engineers have been known to take in what they see and reproduce blueprints after visiting their competitors' factories.

- Taking competitors' products apart. Some companies spend years in research and development activities. But the moment they put a new product on the market, you can buy it, take it apart and improve on it.

- Buying competitors' garbage. A disgusting biasness but high returns for the enemy if one is not too careful what one throws into wastepaper baskets!
